MARDI GRAS.

St. Louis Artist Sings His Woes and Says the Fine Show of This Year is Not Paid For.

Carl Gutherz, a citizen of St. Louis, yes erday brought suit in the Chancery Court sgainst Victor D. Fuchs, Napoleon Hill, E. J. Jones, W. B. Galbreath, H. Furstenheim, George Mitchell, G. V. Rambaut, and David P. Hadden. In his bill he makes the folowing statement of facts: The defendants are members of and compose, in company with others unknown to the complainant, a voluntary association without charter of incorporation, known as the "Mystic Memphi," an organization of certain citizens of the having for its object and aim the representa-tion of spectacular displays on each and every annual Mardi Gras, being the Tuesday next preceding Ash Wednesday of each and every ecclesiastical calendar. In the nonth of April, 1878, E. C. Jones employed ntherz, as an artist by profession, to design for the association a pageant to be presented in the Taxing-District of Shelby county, by the association, on the next ensuing Mardi Gras, which would occur in the month of February or March, 1879, the association having already selected "Flora" to be the subject of the display. E. C. Jenes represented well be scarce. himself to be the chairman of the committee on design of the Mystic Memphi, and said ciation in the matter of procuring the necesration in the little work for the proper presentation of the displays. Jones employed Gutherz to do the work of designing this season than for many a year past." id pageant "Flora," and agreed with him for the price of the work for $600. The design consisted of twenty-two floats and about ne hundred costumes and characters.

therz states that in making the design the pageant it is necessary to ke three sets of drawings—one howing the composition of the story or theme, placing and numbering the costumes and characters which are to take part; the second, a set of finished drawings of characters and costumes, also special prop-erties to be made by the costumer; the third, set of finished plats for the decorator to Gutherz went about the work of designing the pageant, June 1, 1878. He finished the tion of the plats for the builder and decorator to work from, which were insignificant parts of the pageant. He was at work on the pageant. He was at work on the pageant of the pageant.
